Napoleon Bonaparte's Heart

Napoleon Bonaparte's heart was indeed preserved after his death. Following his defeat at the Battle of Waterloo in 1815, Napoleon was exiled to the remote island of Saint Helena, where he died in 1821. During the autopsy, his heart and stomach were removed and placed in two silver vases. These vases were then placed in his coffin along with his body.

Napoleon's remains were later moved to Les Invalides in Paris in 1840, where they are now entombed. The preservation of his heart and other organs has been a subject of historical interest and intrigue.

Napoleon's life and death continue to fascinate historians and the public alike.
